

Kareema Abdul-Basir

My childhood included a start in New York City, a brief time in rural Virginia, and the remaining years in small town, Kensington, Maryland. After raising four children, my education included pre-med, a double major in Psychology and Government and Politics, and master credits in International Labor Studies. I have worked as an Anti-Apartheid, Solidarity, Civil Rights and Labor organizer as well as administrator in non-profits, a legal office and finally in various Muslim community organizations. After 9/11, I participated in Muslim outreach through project LIGHT, Learning Islamic Guidance for Human Tolerance. Now retired, my spiritual path continues with a study of Buddhist psychology and philosophy.
